WordPress Community on Mastodon Launches "Toot the Word" Survey

Last month's Twitter outage gave Mastodon a boost, as the company also announced unpopular changes to its API access. People from the WordPress community continue to trickle into the fediverse, with many going so far as to shutter their Twitter accounts. A fledgling community of WordPress users on Mastodon has made the network home and are reporting more quality interactions than they experience on other platforms.

Daniel Auener, who runs a WordPress agency based in Sweden, curates and maintains a list of WordPress community members' Mastodon accounts that anyone can follow by downloading a CSV file and importing it into Mastodon. He and the other admins of the five largest WordPress-related Mastodon instances have joined together to create a survey for WordPress users.

The survey is being organized by the following admins:

- wptoots.social (@danielauener)
- wpmastodon.es (@javiercasares)
- wp-social.net (@praetorverlag)
- dewp.space (@simon)
- wpbuild.social (@nathan)

"The goal of this two-minute survey is to help us improve the WordPress-related Mastodon instances and Mastodon as a meeting place for the
